The Pavilions at Sansaw officially open for modern rural working

Following the excitement and challenges of designing and constructing such cutting-edge buildings, the much-anticipated opening of The Pavilions finally arrived. Held at the family Estate's business park near Shrewsbury, on Wednesday, September 10th, the opening was very well received by the Duke of Westminster, local dignitaries, business leaders and 160 guests who came to mark the occasion.

The Duke of Westminster was especially supportive of Sansaw's ambitious vision of modern rural living, saying: "Delivering offices of this quality is essential for developing the modern rural economy and I commend the team at Sansaw for such a magnificent achievement." It was fitting then, that as well as unveiling a commemorative plaque, the Duke of Westminster went on to celebrate this beautiful addition of Sansaw's 4,000 acre Estate by planting a tree.

After what had been an extraordinarily wet week, it was rather pleasing that the sun came out for the celebrations, radiating even more warmth over an already warm, welcoming and infectious feel-good gathering.

James Thompson of Sansaw Estates was incredibly proud of what has been achieved with The Pavilions, explaining: "These are the most innovative, environmentally conscious and technologically advanced office buildings in Shropshire, if not the West Midlands."

The Pavilions joins The Stables, a restored historic stable block, in offering a modern way of working, in the heart of the great British countryside.
